Congress of the United States.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

Saturday, February 20.

Debate on the bill received from the Senate entitled "An Act to repeal certain acts respecting the organization of the courts of the U. States."

We were told by an honorable gentleman from Virginia, who rose early in the debate, (Mr. Thompson) that the principles we advocated tended to establish a sinecure system in the country. Sir, I am as little disposed to be accessory to the establishment of such a system, as any gentleman on this floor. But let me ask how this system is to be produced? We established judicial offices, to which numerous and important duties were assigned. A compensation has been allowed to the judges, which no one will say, is immoderate, or disproportioned to the service to be rendered. Those gentlemen first abolish the duties of the offices, then call the judges pensioners, and afterwards accuse us of establishing sinecures. There are no pensioners at present, if there should be any, they will be the creatures of this law. I have ever considered it as a sound and moral maxim, that no one should avail himself of his own wrong. It is a maxim, which ought to be equally obligatory upon the public as upon the private man. In the present case, the judge offers you his service. You cannot say, it is not worth the money you pay for it. You refuse to accept the service; and after engaging to pay him while he continued to perform the service, you deny him his compensation, because he neglects to render services which you have prevented him from performing. Was injustice ever more flagrant? Surely, sir, the judges are innocent. If we did wrong, why should they be punished and disgraced? They did not pass the obnoxious law, they did not create the offices, they had no participation in the guilty business; but they were invited upon the faith of government, to renounce their private professions, to relinquish the emolument of other employments, and to enter into the service of the United States, who engaged to retain them during their lives, if they were guilty of no misconduct. They have behaved themselves well, unexceptionably well, when they find the government rescinding the contract made with them, refusing the stipulated price of their labour, dismissing them from service, and in order to cover the scandalous breach of faith, stigmatizing them with names which may render them odious to their countrymen. Is there a gentleman on the floor of this House, who would not revolt at such conduct in private life? Is there one who would feel himself justified, after employing a person for a certain time, and agreeing to pay a certain compensation, to dismiss the party from the service upon any caprice which altered his views, deny him the stipulated compensation, and to abuse him with opprobrious names, for expecting the benefit of the engagement.

A bold attempt was made by one of the gentlemen from Virginia, (Mr. Giles) to force to his aid the Statute of 13th Wm. 3d. I call it a bold attempt, because the gentleman was obliged to rely upon his own assertion to support the ground of his argument. He stated, that the clause in the constitution was borrowed from a similar provision in the Statute. I know nothing about the fact, but I will allow the gentleman its full benefit. In England at an earlier period, the judges held their commissions during the good pleasure of the monarch. The parliament desired, and the king consented, that the royal prerogative should be restrained. That the offices of the judges should not depend on the will of the crown alone, but upon the joint pleasure of the crown and of parliament. The king consented to part with a portion of his prerogative by relinquishing his power to remove the judges without the advice of his parliament. But by an express clause in the statute, he retained the authority to remove them with the advice of his parliament. Suppose the clause had been omitted, which referred the right to remove upon the address of the Houses of parliament, and the Statute had been worded in the unqualified language of our constitution, that the judges should hold their offices during good behavior, would not the prerogative of removal have been abolished altogether? I will not say that the honorable member has been peculiarly unfortunate in the employment of this argument, because, sir, it appears to me, that most to which he has had recourse, when justly considered, have operated against the cause they were designed to support.

The gentleman tells us that the constitutional provision on this subject was taken from the statute of William. Will he answer me this plain question? Why do we find omitted in the constitution, that part of the statutory provision, which allowed the judges to be removed upon the address of the two branches of the legislature? Does he suppose that the clause was not observed? Does he imagine that the provision was dropped through inadvertency? Will he impute to gross neglect, or to an instrument every sentence and word, and comma, of which, he has told us was so maturely considered, and so warily settled. No, sir, it is impossible; and give me leave to say, that if this part of the constitution were taken from the statute (and the gentleman from Virginia must have better information on the subject than I have) that a stronger argument could not be adduced, to show that it was the intention of those who framed the constitution, by omitting that clause in the statute which made the judges tenants of their offices at the will of Parliament, to improve in this country the English plan of judicature, by rendering the judges independent of the legislature. And I shall have occasion in the course of my observations to show, that the strongest reasons derived from the nature of our government, and which do not apply to the English form, require the improvement to be made.

Upon this point, sir, we may borrow a few additional rays of light from the constitutions of Pennsylvania, of Delaware, and of some other states. In those states it has been thought, that there might be misconduct on the part of a judge, not amounting to an impeachable offence, for which he should be liable to be removed. Their constitutions therefore have varied from that of the United States, and rendered their judges liable to be removed upon the address of two thirds of each branch of the legislature. Does it not strike every mind, that it was the intention of those constitutions to have judgments independent of a majority of each branch of the legislature; and I apprehend also that it may be fairly inferred, that it was understood in those states, when their constitution was formed, that even two thirds of each branch of the legislature would not have the power to remove a judge whose tenure of office was during good behavior, unless the power was expressly given to them by the constitution. I cannot well conceive of any thing more absurd in an instrument designed to last for centuries and to bind the furious passions of party, than to fortify one party to judicial independence, and to leave another totally unguarded against the violence of legislative power.

It has been urged by the gentleman from Virginia, that our admission that congress has a power to modify the office of judge, leads to the conclusion, that they have the power to abolish the office. Because, by faring away their powers they may at length reduce them to a shadow, and leave them as humble and as contemptible as a court of piepowder. The office of a judge consists of judicial powers which he is appointed to execute. Every law which is passed increases or diminishes those powers, and so far modifies the office; nay, it is competent for the legislature to prescribe additional duties or dispense with unnecessary services, which are connected with the office of the judge. But this power has its bounds. You may modify the office to any extent which does not affect the independence of the judge. The judge is to hold the office during good behavior; now modify as you please, so that you do not infringe this constitutional provision.

Do you ask me to draw a line and say, thus far you can go and no farther. I admit no line can be drawn. It is an affair of sound and bona fide discretion. Because a discretion on the subject is given to the legislature, to argue upon the abuse of that discretion is adopting a principle subversive of all legitimate power.

The constitution is predicated upon the existence of a certain degree of integrity in man. It has trusted powers liable to enormous abuse, if all political honesty be discarded. The legislature is not limited in the amount of the taxes which they have a right to impose, nor as to the objects to which they are to be applied. Does this power give us the property of the country, because by taxes we might draw it into the public coffers, and then cut up the treasury and divide the spoils? Is there any power in respect to which a precise line can be drawn, between the direct exercise and the abuse of it.

I can only say, therefore, on this subject, that every man is acquitted to his own conscience who bona fide does not intend, and who sincerely does not believe, that by the law which he is about to pass, he interferes with the judges holding their offices during good behavior.

I am now brought, Mr. Chairman, to take notice of some remarks which fell from the gentleman from Virginia, which do not belong to the subject before us; but are of sufficient importance to deserve particular attention. He called our attention, in a very impressive manner, to the state of the parties in this house at the time when the act of the last session passed. He describes us in a state of blind paroxysm, incapable of discerning the nature or tendency of the measures we were pursuing. That a majority of the house were struggling to counteract the expression of the public will, in relation to the person who was to be the chief magistrate of the country.

I did suppose, sir, that this business was at an end, and I did imagine that as gentlemen had accomplished their object, they would have been satisfied. But as the subject is again renewed, we must be allowed to justify our conduct. I knew not what the gentleman calls an expression of the public will. There were two candidates for the office of President, who were presented to the house of Representatives with equal suffrages. The constitution gave us the right and made it our duty to elect that one of the two whom we thought preferable. A public man is to notice the public will as constitutionally expressed. The gentleman from Virginia and many others may have had their preference, but that preference of the public will did not appear by its constitutional expression. Sir, I am not certain, that either of those candidates had a majority of the country in his favor. Excluding the state of South Carolina, the country was equally divided. We know that parties in that state were nearly equally balanced, and the claims of both the candidates were supported by no other scrutiny into the public will, than our official return of votes. Those votes are very imperfect evidence of the true will of a majority of the nation. They resulted from political intrigue, and artificial arrangements.

When we look at the votes we must suppose, that every man in Virginia voted the same way. These votes are received as a correct expression of the public will. And yet we know, that if the votes of that state were apportioned according to the several voices of the people, that at least seven out of twenty-one, would have been opposed to the successful candidates. It was the suppression of the will of one third of Virginia, which enables gentlemen now to say, that the present chief magistrate is the man of the people. I consider that as the public will, which is expressed by constitutional organs. To that will I bow and submit. The public will, thus manifested, gave to the House of Representatives, the choice of the two men for President. Neither of them was the man whom I wished to make President, but my election was confined by the constitution to one of the two, and I gave my vote to the one who I thought was the greater and better man. That vote I repeated, and in that vote I should have persisted, had I not been driven from it, by imperious necessity. The prospect ceased of the vote being effectual, and the alternative only remained of making one man for President, or having no President at all. I chose, as I then thought, the lesser evil.

From the scene in this house, the gentleman carried us to one in the senate. I should blush, sir, for the honor of the country, could I suppose that the law designed to be repealed, owned its support in that body to the motives which have been indicated. The charge designed to be conveyed, not only deeply implicates the integrity of individuals of the senate, but of the person who was then the chief magistrate. The gentleman, going beyond all precedent, has mentioned the names of members of that body, to whom commissions issued for offices not created by the bill before them, but which that bill by the promotions it afforded was likely to render vacant. He has considered the scandal of the transaction, as aggravated by the issuing of commissions for offices not actually vacant, upon the bare presumption that they would become vacant, by the incumbents accepting commissions for higher offices which were issued in their favor. The gentleman has particularly dwelt upon the indecent appearance of the business from two commissions being held by different persons at the same time, for the same office.

I beg that it will be understood, that I mean to give no opinion as to the regularity of granting a commission for a judicial office, upon the probability of a vacancy, before it is actually vacant. But I shall be allowed to say that so much doubt attends the point, that an innocent mistake might be made on the subject. I believe, sir, it has been the practice to consider the acceptance of an office, as relating to the date of the commission. The officer is allowed his salary from that date, upon the principle that the commission is a grant of the office, and the title commences with the date of the grant. This principle is certainly liable to abuse, but where there was a suspicion of abuse, I presume the government would depart from it. Admitting the office to pass by the commission, and the acceptance to relate to its date, it then does not appear very incorrect in the case of a commission, for the office of a circuit judge, granted to a district judge, as the acceptance of the commission of the former office relates to the date of the commission, to consider the latter office as vacant from the same time. The offices are incompatible. You cannot suppose the same person in both offices at the same time. From that moment, therefore, that you consider the office of circuit judge filled by a person who holds the commission of district judge, you must consider the office of district judge as vacated. The grant is contingent. If the contingency happen, the office vests from the date of the commission, if the contingency does not happen the grant is void. If this reasoning be sound, it was not irregular in the late administration, after granting a commission to a district judge, for the place of a circuit judge, to make a grant of the office of the district judge, upon the contingency of his accepting the office of circuit judge. I now return, sir, to that point of the charge, which was personal in its nature, and of infinitely the most serious import. It is a charge as to which, we can only ask, is it true? If it be true, it cannot be excused; it cannot be palliated; it is vile, profligate, corrupt, which every honest mind will execrate. But, sir, we are not to condemn, till we have evidence of the fact. If the offence be serious, the proof ought to be plenary. I will consider the evidence of the fact, upon which the honorable member has relied, and I will shew him by the application of it to a stronger case, that it is of a nature to prove nothing.

Let me first state the principal case. Two gentlemen of the senate, Mr. Reed of South Carolina, and Mr. Green of Rhode Island, who voted in favor of the law of last session, each received an appointment to the place of district judge, which was designed to be vacated by the promotion of the district judge to the office of circuit judge. The gentleman conveyed to us a distinct impression of his opinion, that there was an understanding between these gentlemen and the President, and that the offices were the promised price of their votes.

I presume, sir, the gentleman will have more charity, in the case which I am about to mention, and he will for once admit that public men ought not to be condemned, upon loose conclusions drawn from equivocal presumptions.

That case, sir, to which I refer, carries me once more to the scene of the Presidential election. I should not have introduced it into this debate, had it not been called by the honorable member from Virginia. In that scene I had my part, it was a part not barren of incident, and which has left an impression, which cannot easily depart from my recollection. I know who were rendered important characters, either from the position of personal means, or from the accident of political situations. And now, sir, let me ask what his reflection when he observed whole vote the hung, has since Presidential favor violate the proceeding, in but I hope the set me will be Mr. Charles Pi was not a mem one of the successful pro the profess well ascertain Carolina we of the scales. Mr. Pinckney, what his reflections and beliefs will be, when he observes that every man, on whose vote the event of the election hung, has since been distinguished by Presidential favor. I fear, sir, I shall violate the decorum of Parliamentary proceeding, in the mentioning of names, but I hope the example which has been set me will be admitted as an excuse. Mr. Charles Pinckney of South Carolina was not a member of the house, but he was one of the most active, efficient, and successful promoters of the election of the present chief magistrate. It was well ascertained that the votes of South Carolina were to turn the equal balance of the scales. The zeal and industry of Mr. Pinckney had no bounds.—The doubtful politics of South Carolina were decided, and her votes cast into the scale of Mr. Jefferson. Mr. Pinckney has since been appointed minister plenipotentiary to the court of Madrid. An appointment as high and honorable, as any within the gift of the executive. I will not deny that this pretreatment is the reward of talents and services, although, sir, I have never yet heard of the talents or the services of Mr. Charles Pinckney. In the House of Representatives I know what was the value of the vote of Mr. Claiborne of Tennessee. The vote of a state was in his hands. Mr. Claiborne, has since been raised to the high dignity of governor of the Mississippi Territory. I know how great and low greatly felt, was the importance of the vote of Mr. Linn of New Jersey. The delegation of the state consists of five members. Two of the delegation were decidedly for Mr. Jefferson, two were decidedly for Mr. Burr. Mr. Linn was considered as inclining to one side, but still doubtful. Both parties looked up to him for the vote of New Jersey. He gave it to Mr. Jefferson, and Mr. Linn has since had the profitable office of supervisor of his district conferred upon him. Mr. Lyon of Vermont was in this instance an important man. He neutralized the vote of Vermont. His absence alone would have given the vote of a state to Mr. Burr. It was too much to give an office to Mr. Lyon; his character was low. But Mr. Lyon's son has been handsomely provided for in one of the executive offices. I shall add to the catalogue but the name of one more gentleman, Mr. Edward Livingston of New York. I knew well, till well I knew the consequence of this gentleman. His means were not limited to his own vote—nay, I always considered more than the vote of New York within his power.—Mr. Livingston has been made the attorney for the district of New York—the road of preferment has been opened to him—and his brother has been raised to the distinguished place of minister plenipotentiary to the French republic. This catalogue might be swelled to a much greater magnitude; but I fear, Mr. Chairman, were I to proceed farther, it might be supposed, that I myself harbored the uncharitable suspicions of the integrity of the chief magistrate, and of the purity of the gentleman whom he thought proper to promote, which it is my design alone to banish from the mind of the honorable member from Virginia. It would be doing me great injustice to suppose, that I have the smallest desire, or have had the remotest intention to tarnish the fame of the present chief magistrate; or of one of the honorable gentlemen who have been the objects of his favor, by the statement which I have made; my motive is of an opposite nature. The late President appointed gentlemen to office, to whom he owed no personal obligations, but who only supported what has been considered as a favorite measure. This has been assumed as a sufficient ground, not only of suspicion, but of condemnation. The present executive, leaving scarcely an exception, has appointed to office, or has by accident, indirectly gratified every man, who had any distinguished means in the competition, for the Presidential office, of deciding the election in his favour. Yet, Sir, all this furnishes too feasible a presumption to warrant me to express a suspicion of the integrity of a great officer, or of the probity of honorable men, in the discharge of the high functions which they had derived from the confidence of their country. I am sure, sir, in this case, the honorable member from Virginia is as exempt from any suspicion as myself. And I shall have accomplished my whole object, if I induce that honorable member, and other members of the committee, who entertain his suspicious as to the conduct of the late executive, to review the ground of those suspicions, and to consider that in a case furnishing much stronger ground for the presumption of criminality, they have an unshaken belief, an unbroken confidence in the purity and fairness of the executive conduct.

NEW-YORK, March 12.

Capt. Ward, who arrived at Boston, Friday last, in a short passage from Cadiz, informs, that the report of the capture of the Tripolitan brig, by the frigate Philadelphia, had been circulated there—but that the American Consul at Cadiz, though in the habit of corresponding twice a week with Gibraltar, had received no information whatever thereof.

Capt. Ward also states, that an order had been received at Cadiz, from Madrid, to subject all vessels from the United States to perform forty days quarantine—excepting vessels from New York and Norfolk, which are not permitted to enter the port on any account whatever.

Entered, brigs Eliza and Mary, Bell, St. Vincents; Thomas, Haws, Havana; schr. Favorite, Gros, Wilmington, N. C. sloop Betsey, —, St. Anns, (Jam.)

TUESDAY, MARCH 16.

ALL IS LOST!

Sol occubuit, et nox atra sequebatur.

The Sun of Federalism has set indeed,—
"has fallen, like Lucifer, never to rise again."

The fatal hour long dreaded by the friends of our country has arrived. The constitution of our government is no more.—That department of the government which the people, by their constitution, declared should be "dependent only on their God and their good behaviour," is now declared, by a democratic administration, to be dependent on the executive and legislative departments.

The third of March, which terminated the first year of the present administration, terminated also the existence of that form of government which WASHINGTON, and the other heroes and sages of our revolution, with so much wisdom and so much labor, established and sustained.

The desperation, with which our present rulers have proceeded in their work of destruction, is highly alarming and portentous, and leaves no ground of hope that they will relent or recoil from the execution of their purpose, till the devastation be complete.

The principle is already established, so far as a legislative act can establish it, that the judges of our court have no power to act contrary to the will of the legislature, and that if they attempt it, the legislature may remove them from office; although the constitution declares that they shall not be removed, except upon impeachment and conviction of misdemeanor in office, and also compels them to swear, that they will support the constitution and regulate their decisions by it. If, therefore, the present Congress should think proper to declare it high treason to sentence or ridicule the president, or their own proceedings; to levy a tax upon one part of the Union and to exempt another; or to pass any other unconstitutional law; the judges must either execute such law, in violation of their oaths, or else submit to a removal from office. Not content, however, with this sweeping principle, which in general terms bring down the judicial department from the high and commanding ground on which it was placed by the constitution, and renders it a humble and passive instrument for the execution of whatever the ambition or the vengeance of a factious legislature, or an aspiring executive may require, the ruling party have carried their excess of violence still farther, and plunged the deadly shaft still deeper into the vitals of the constitution. As though fearful that some vestige of life might yet remain, which the friends of our government, at a future day, might cherish into renewed activity and vigour, they have proceeded to demolish the only part of the constitution, relative to this department, which remained inviolate after they had usurped and exercised the power of removing judges. This is the part which declares, "that the judges, shall, at stated times, receive for their services a compensation which shall not be diminished during their continuance in office."—By the bill which has now passed both houses of Congress, two judges only of the circuit court are continued in office, and five hundred dollars per annum are taken from the salaries of each. It would seem as though the proprietors of these violences had resolved to fix upon the plainest and most unequivocal parts of the constitution, for the purpose of removing all doubts of their determination to treat that solemn compact as a dead letter.

Under these distressing circumstances we pronounce, with grief, that all is lost.—It is true, that we may be governed, for a while, under the present order of things; we may submit, for a season, to the domination of judges whose only law is the will of a faction on whom they are conscious of dependence for their powers and their salaries. But this period cannot be long. Even France, more corrupt and better fitted than we are for submitting to despotism of the most atrocious nature, could not, for a long time, be subjected to the oppression of revolutionary tribunals; who asked no other question respecting causes brought before them, than what is the pleasure of our masters in this case?

The time, then, must speedily arrive when such tyranny will no longer be tolerated. What will then be the lot of our devoted country? To restore our former constitution will be impossible, and if possible, would perhaps be useless: since the nation could never again be brought to place confidence in an instrument which, from experience, has been found unable to withstand, for one year, the attacks of its enemies when in power. To frame another, in which all the states would agree, is a thing devoutly to be wished, but not to be expected. Our business, however, is not to predict, but to inform the public of things as they are.—Let those who have demolished the noble fabric, reared and sustained by Washington and his adherents, faithful to him and to their country, now furnish a better if they can: if not, let them answer to their country and to posterity for the consequences which must follow.

Little more than a year has elapsed since a nation was made a mourner by the loss of Washington, our common friend and common father. Have we not now still greater cause for mourning the loss of that national compact, the acquisition and support of which constituted the labor and the glory of his life? Little did that great and good man suspect that his favorite system, the result of his wisdom and patriotism would survive him but one year.—One consolation, however remains to those who have for twelve years successfully opposed the torrent of foreign and domestic disorganizers. They have done all that could be done to save the republic and to preserve the charter of our liberties entire. They have not to reproach themselves with want of vigilance or want of activity in the cause of their country. On no occasion, perhaps, have so ardent reason and patriotism obtained so proud a triumph over sophistry and faction as has been exhibited during the late debates in both houses of Congress. Let what will ensue, the blood of our country must be upon the heads of those who now govern. As to their opposers, they have washed their hands from the guilt, by every argument, expostulation and entreaty which could be urged. If, after all this, our inexorable enemies have proceeded to inflict political death, the world must see that it is by their hand we die, and at their hand will the blood of our nation be required.

(Gaz. of the United States.)

We are informed that an Irish gentleman has lately constructed a hot house in this city, for the purpose of rearing Oranges, Lemons, and Citrons, and that he has applied to Mr. Duane, in consequence of the offers of his influence with congress, to procure prohibitory duties to be laid upon the importation of these articles. It is said, that Mr. Duane has been graciously pleased to have the petition referred to the committee who reported a bill for imposing an additional duty of 50 per cent. upon the importation of printing types, &c. Phil. pap.

SHIPWRECK!

Sloop Delight, belonging to Robert Gilmer of Baltimore, James Simpson, master, bound to the Island of St. Domingo, was unfortunately cast away on the rocks of the north side of Dominica, the 26th of January, 1832, about 5 o'clock in the morning.

Capt. Simpson, J. G. Hamilton, and a boy, were washed off the mast about 7 A. M. and Joseph Baker, John, an Italian, and Francis, an apprentice to Capt. Dawson, were washed off the side of the vessel; they were thrown ashore on the island and buried. John Joseph the cook was washed off the keel after the upset, and got safe ashore on a piece of plank. The mate, Daniel Birkholtz, hung to the keel of the vessel by two of the bolts, for 38 or 40 hours, when a boat was fitted up and sent to his assistance. The vessel was stove to pieces, and with the cargo entirely lost.

PROPOSALS,

By G. F. HOPKINS, No. 118, Pearl Street, New York, For publishing by Subscription, in two handsome octavo volumes,

THE FEDERALIST,

ON THE NEW CONSTITUTION.

BY PUBLIUS.

WRITTEN IN 1788.

TO WHICH IS ADDED,

PACIFICUS,

ON

The Proclamation of Neutrality.

WRITTEN IN 1793.

The whole revised and corrected, with new passages and notes.

THE FEDERALIST was written in a series of numbers, under the signature of Publius, shortly after the promulgation of the Federal Constitution, and addressed to the People of the State of New York, with the design of enforcing the propriety and necessity of its adoption.

It is principally the production of a man, whose name will be held in sacred respect long after the pitiful attempts which have been made to slander his name shall have sunk into oblivion. Two other gentlemen, of distinguished talents, occasionally contributed some essays, which will be marked in the publication.

All parties seem at length united in professions of regard for the Constitution; if they are sincere, the consideration cannot fail to enhance the value of a work, which, by employing in its favor all the energy of argument, and all the perspicuity of eloquence, was eminently useful in procuring its general ratification.

Whoever is desirous of being well informed of the principles and provisions of our Government, and the manner in which they have been supported and vindicated, of the objections that were made to the Constitution by its first opponents, and how they were answered, will find these volumes fraught with ample and satisfactory instruction. The study of them must form an essential part of the education of the American statesman. Politicians, indeed, of every country, will here discover materials in the science of government well worthy of their attention; a science, of all others, the most interesting to mankind, as it most deeply concerns human happiness. The Federalist contains principles that may be remembered and studied with advantage by all classes of men in other countries than our own, and in other ages than that in which we live. The People of America alone have afforded the example of a pure Representative Republic. In this work it will appear, that the principles of this form of Government have been well understood, and thoroughly developed, and should, unfortunately, the experiment which we have made, hereafter fail, it will be in vain to attempt the renewal of similar systems, as no rational hope can be entertained, that more correct notions on this subject will prevail than are here exhibited.

To preserve these papers, therefore, which have so much intrinsic merit, and such lasting utility, in a dress suitable to their character, is the inducement to their republication.

PACIFICUS is from the pen of the same enlightened statesman who was the chief author of the Federalist. These Essays were written in defence of the first leading step which our Government took to preserve that Neutrality which it continued to maintain during the late Transatlantic conflict; a conflict which has annihilated the minor powers of Europe, and shaken the civilized world.

Now that the storm has passed over, and the angry and tumultuous passions which at that time agitated our country, have in some measure subsided, these papers will be read with profit and pleasure by the intelligent man of every party. Candor will probably wonder, that any should have doubted of the fitness of the measures which this writer has so ably advocated, and which experience has so forcibly proved to have been the best adapted to the interests of the country.

To give to these latter Essays a form which shall outlive the fleeting impressions of a newspaper, they are incorporated in these volumes. Publius and Pacificus will serve to keep in just remembrance two very important events in the history of our country.

The first gentleman here alluded to is General Hamilton—the other two, Mr. Madison and Mr. Jay.

CONDITIONS.

I. The Work shall be put to press immediately after 400 subscribers are obtained, and finished with the utmost expedition.

II. Where practicable, the books shall be forwarded, free of expence, to such places as may be designated, and a person appointed to deliver them.

III. It shall be printed on a superfine medium paper, with a neat type, handsomely bound and lettered, and delivered to subscribers at Two Dollars a volume. To non-subscribers the price will be enhanced.

IV. Subscribers to pay, where convenient, one dollar in advance.

Subscriptions received at the Office of the Alexandria Advertiser, and by the different Booksellers in Alexandria, New-York, January, 1802.
